Tallinn – Living history

Tallinn, named Lonely Planet's Best Value Destination of 2018, is an amazing blend of old and new. The world-famous Old Town was largely constructed between the 13th and 16th centuries and is a designated UNESCO World Heritage Site. Tallinn is a city with roots dating back to the Bronze Age – the first settlements in Tallinn were found to have been built in approximately 2500 BC. Tallinn has been governed by the Danes, Swedes, Russians and now Estonians. Its cityscape is as varied as its history – from stone and wooden houses dating back several hundred years, to Soviet-era warrens and modern skyscrapers. In the heart of Tallinn lies Old Town, which was first mentioned in 1154. To the southeast is the buzzing business centre, and to the northwest is the area with romantic wooden houses. So walking through Tallinn is like walking through several hundred years of history with a splash of modern life added in as well. Tallinn is home to over 50 museums and numerous art galleries. The most famous is probably the KUMU Art Museum, located in Kadriorg. In KUMU, visitors can get a quick overview of Estonian art, both traditional and modern. KUMU is located in Kadriorg Park, which is also home to Kadriorg Palace, residence of the President of Estonia. Kadri-org is considered to be one of the most beautiful parks in Estonia, originally built by Russian czar Peter I in 1718.

The Rotermann Quarter, which will be 190 this year, is similar to the Old Town of Tallinn when it comes to the density of historic buildings. The Rotermann Quarter has developed into an urban space that is home to unique architecture and vibrant rhythms. It has also become the chosen home of several noted marketing, advertising and law firms. The Rotermann Quarter is home to the best restaurants and cafes in Tallinn. Between modern and historic architecture, you will find global flavours ranging from Asian to Mexican cuisine and from kosher food to rustic pork. Come and see the new Stalker food street or rediscover some of your old favourites flavours located in the heart of the city. It is home to the best shops and restaurants in Tallinn. Cosy cafes and restaurants invite you to sample flavours from around the world, while shops satisfy buyers with a selection ranging from fast fashion to lifestyle products. Like every proper city, the Rotermann Quarter has a gym, cinema, beauty salons, dance studios and other service providers to make people's lives more beautiful, harmonious, healthy and comfortable. The quaint city quarter is located within walking distance from the A and B terminals of the port (1 km and 900 m), as well as from the Viru Hotel (200 m). A tram goes directly to the airport.

If you want more information about what to do in Tallinn, you can either visit the webpage www.visittallinn.ee or the Tourist Information Centre at Viru Keskus. In order to make the most of your experience in Tallinn, consider getting the Tallinn Card, which features free entrance to museums, free sightseeing tours and city transport, and also discounts at various entertainment facilities. More information about the card can be found at www.visittallinn.ee/est/tallinncard

Dining out

Restaurant Tuljak

Hungry? Not a problem. Finding an interesting, affordable place to eat in Tallinn is easy, especially given the culinary boom the city has seen in the last few years. The bigger challenge will be figuring out what kind of restaurant you are in the mood for: traditional Estonian, cutting edge fusion, African, Thai or maybe something with a medieval theme... the list goes on. Tallinn's bigger pubs and cafes also offer full-fledged meals ranging from simple meat-and-potato dishes to elaborate salads and pastas. Most of the city's restaurants are clustered in and around the Old Town, and nearly all have English menus and English-speaking staff. Here are just a few examples of the restaurants in Tallinn from the culinary master book White Guide Nordic Global Master Level:

The culinary boom 180°

180° was created by a Michelin star chef Matthias Diether and his dedicated crew.

'The food we make must speak for itself. This means that the real stars of our dishes are raw ingredients – without excessive additions,' said Matthias about his principles.

The fine-dining restaurant is located in the historic Port Noblessner. It boasts a wonderful view of the sea, has an open kitchen, an elegant menu, and offers aesthetic pleasure in addition to an unforgettable gastronomic experience. A 6-course menu is served to a 10-person table. Guests can see how the chefs prepare the food up close. Individual tables can choose between 4–6-course menus.

Ö

Ö is such an important and beautiful letter that we simply must cherish it!

Restaurant Ö offers its customers new kinds of delights from Northern cuisine. Here, a dinner is like a small play telling its story. The head chefs of the restaurant consider using the best local and northern raw materials as well as working with small producers and farmers self-explanatory.

Different seasons, harvesting, and ancient cooking methods – disassembling old classics and reassembling them in new ways results in good and authentic meals.

When preparing the menu, we always add a bit of the mellow humour of the island...

Fotografiska

Fotografiska Restaurant adds a new level to Estonian food culture. Such reuse, from the interior to the serving of food, has never been seen in Estonia before. The sourdough bread, which is our substitute for the traditional Estonian black bread, is served on 'plates' made from the bread baking trays of a former bread factory. The cabbage paste, which replaces butter, is served in a bottle bottom cut from a wine bottle. The dishes on the menu are mainly vegetarian. If you wish, you can add the daily meat or fish to each dish.

Tuljak

A reborn legend. This is where history meets contemporary design. This is where we let our passions run free. Through and through sophisticated, with Copper accents. Like Tuljak's fiery sunsets. Painted black like our velvety nights. Beautiful food.
